Subject contents

Substantive Criminal Law in comparative legal perspective covers the knotty issues of the general science of crime. The problems of introduction to the science of crime, including: the general theory of punishment, the history of the so-called schools of criminal law, the principles and functions of criminal law in the political-criminal, philosophical and constitutional perspective, and the principles of international criminal law will be discussed in classical terms. The main part of the lecture will include a discussion of the prerequisites for criminal responsibility and the circumstances excluding responsibility, as well as the issue of stage and phenomenal forms (Complicity), and the confluence of the provisions of the law and the confluence of offenses, including in a comparative approach
