Subject objectives	Using concrete examples, students will critically analyse the issues that fall under the umbrella of New Urbanism, which seeks to restore the importance and shape of public space in harmony with human well-being, the creation and maintenance of social bonds and the construction of a unique urban identity. We will be interested in the processes of reclaiming the right to the city - and therefore the development of participation and subjectivity by different groups. Students will discuss a variety of urban practices and discuss issues related to the participation of sociologists in shaping space
