Subject objectives	Students acquire knowledge about the fundamental process of socialization a process through which social and moral maturity is achieved, which guarantees a relatively conflict-free way of functioning in social situations and groups. This main goal gives rise to another problem, namely the need for students to learn about various forms of disorders of this process and to recognize the complex issue of methods of dealing with these dysfunctions. It is therefore about the process of resocialization and the theoretical foundations of this process, which are sought in the so-called great psychological theories and pedagogical and sociological theories.
