Subject objectives	The aim of the lecture is to present a synthesis of the history of modern collecting and the related origins of museology. The lecture will also highlight reflections on the significance of collecting as an important element of cultural history, shaping socio-cultural discourse from the 19th century to the present day. During the lectures, students will be able to familiarise themselves with examples of Polish and European collections, including the evolution of the national collection model from elite magnate collections, through the collections of the great bourgeoisie, to 20th-century collecting by the middle class and intelligentsia. We will look not only at selected social groups, but also at diverse methodologies, including a feminist approach to research on collections. The aim of the lecture is to present both the facts and the socio-cultural conditions influencing the historically variable forms of collecting.

Subject contents	The main issue addressed during the lectures will be an analysis of the specific nature of art collecting in the 19th and 20th centuries in Poland, as well as a reflection on the meaning and purpose of this practice. The starting point will be the question: what is a collection in the understanding of cultural anthropology? The specificity of the Polish model of national collecting in the European context, shaped by particular political and cultural conditions, will be defined, and the links between collecting and museology will be indicated. Next, selected key phenomena in the history of collecting and museology from the 19th and 20th centuries to the present day will be discussed in chronological order. The examples given will illustrate the process of democratisation of 19th-century collecting from the elite collections of magnates (the Czartoryski, Lubomirski, Zamoyski families, etc.), through the collections of the great bourgeoisie (the Kronenbergs, Blochs, Rotwands), to 20th-century collecting by the middle class and intelligentsia. We will look not only at selected social groups, but also at diverse methodologies, including a feminist approach and the phenomenon of women's collecting. The course will include references to the history of museology and the art market in Poland and the most important European centres (Paris, London, Berlin).
